THE ACTOR'S CUE.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY EUNICE MONROE.

Here at the wings I stand tonight,
The mimic scene goes on;
Before, how many faces bright
That smiles of pleasure don!
My dreams flow backward to the Past,
And bear me with them, too.
Where are the friends, in what play cast,
That once paused for the cue?

Here's Jack, who tragedy essayed,
He does the comic now;
The laurels have been long delayed
Which were to deck his brow!
And Tom, a light comedian,
Now does the heavies grim;
How quick to seed his talents ran,
How soon his smiles grew dim!

Othello was grave Jerry's aim;
Ah, where is he, old friend!
The last account that to me came
Showed him upon the "end!"
And Harry, starting with the "bones,"
In some old minstrel show,
Now sings in very dulcet tones
Mid opera's tinsel glow!

Then Jake, who was a call boy bold,
That line at last forsook;
He's now a manager with gold,
Crammed full each season's book!
Alas! where are a hundred more!
Some sleep beyond the sea,
The weary play of life now o'er
Its triumphs gone, its glees!

And so I muse here at the wing;
I see the faces bright,
As, one by one, doth fancy bring
Old comrades to my sight!
The mimic scene no more I heed,
For life seems bright and new;
The laurel wreath is but a weed!
Gone dreams!—there is my cue!

GATES OF EDEN.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY S. BRANDER SAVAGE.

It was over the head of the leader of the orchestra that he saw her first. For a short time past he had not been watching the stage, his serious dark eyes having been intent upon following the baton going hither and yon at its whimsical tangents. When, at last, they grew less eccentric, he perceived, with a feeling that the swooping ebony stick had been the magician's wand that had summoned the spritely thither, a face that burst upon him with that odd insistence some faces possess of being recognized as familiar, and precious, and long looked for.

Might it be possible that such faces are ideals of which we may have dreamed for ages, in other lives, perhaps, ere a kindly Karma, won by patience and long suffering, allowed them to appear before us?

Silas Brentayne felt his soul go out to her—felt it traverse the hot, glaring pen that held the musicians, leap the footlights, and stand before her. She must, in some way, have felt his nearness and his intensity, for she caught her breath sharply and turned, as though drawn by some invisible magnet, toward Silas.

Their eyes met—her laughing, azure orbs suddenly growing grave, yet alert, as do those of an animal sensing danger. But what danger could exist for her in the presence of that rather countryfied looking young gentlemen down there in the second row?

Silas recovered his soul, so to speak, only when she danced back into the wings, and disappeared. L. U. E. in a whirling, self-fashioned cloud of gauzy draperies. He glanced hastily down at the programme and read her name. It shocked him a little; but so little that, after the first blush, the shock seemed less painful than pleasurable. "Billy Coventry," said the ornate sheet in his hand, when he had followed the dots that led across from "The Queen of the Silver Moonbeams" to the assumer's name.

Every night for a week thereafter Silas paid for a seat well down front, and thought his dollars well invested. Billy, like a wild little animal that grows gradually tame, began to look for the beaming light in those serious eyes, and to even anxiously scan the parquet for the adoring rays. And Pate, taking up the two threads that were becoming entangled, caught them together upon the loom of life, and made a pretty pattern of the bright warp and sombre roof.

Brentayne was needed upon his farm in Jersey, but he could not go back without Billy. She was his—she belonged to him—she must return with him. He said this over and over and over to himself, until his affirmations of possession, by such uncanny hook or crook as only smiling Fortune knows, gave her to him through the happy mediumship of a fussy old aunt, who, sentimental to the last, saw in Silas Brentayne not only that object of her idolatry, a lover, but a possible snug harbor for herself, when her "old women" should come to be relegated to private life on account of their extreme senility—and hers.

In anticipation, and with the olfactory organs of her spirit, Billy scented the clover, the new mown hay, the Brentayne dairy and the rose garden; saw with that finer sight that needs no material vision the golden noons, the misty twilights and the pale splendor of the moon; heard with the ears of her simple soul the singing of birds, the sighing of breezes, and the babbling of brooks. Urged by these delights, as well as by the far seeing and only relative in her possession, Billy sold her torgery—grease paint and gauzes—for what they would bring, to Geraldine Montague Sutherland, and with this modest sum bought herself a meagre but pretty tressure; then, carrying her aunt's blessing with her, went home with Silas.

The joy of the young man was pathetic. Tears stood for smiles, so intense was his emotion. The Brentayne farm, an age long inheritance from father to son, took upon itself the witcheries of an Edenic garden, holding an Adam and an Eve as refreshingly simple and unconventionally joyous as were the first fond pair.

Billy's eyes (tiring of the monotony of sunny slope and shadowy forest—her ears sated with the song of the thrush and bobolink—her tilted nose surfeited with the odor of rose and blooming clover, and hankering for the dear delights of the theatre, with the dust bordered, gassy atmosphere of the grimy stage, as hungrily as her eyes longed for the glitter and glare, her ears for the noisy orchestral din and soul satisfying applause) began gazing toward that gate through which there is no return.

this furiously aggressive little beauty. "Saddle Tartar, and fetch him to the block at once."

Into the house, up the stairs, a hurried donning of habit, hat and gloves, the hasty scribbling of direful tidings, the pinning of the folded scrawl to the snow white coverlet, and swift descent and mounting at the block—and awaited the ex-queen of the silver moonbeams through the hot September sunshine!

What exhilaration lies in a grand coup! The nerves in Billy's body strung themselves up in readiness for whatever majors or minors the fingers of Fate, commanded by Circumstance, might play upon them. With every rapid step he took Tartar waxed more wroth, more indignant, more to have yearned for the praise she has missed—to have weighed in the false scales of self-deception the adoration of the world against the sweet, wholesome tenderness that has been hers—good God, is this all so evil, then?

On and on and on! Billy's splendid physical strength is now almost exhausted. At times she is dimly conscious that people shriek at Tartar as they dash by them, maddening him the more. When will that awful moment come to her, when from the shock of an impending concussion she will open her eyes in another world? She almost longs for it, since it must end her wild suspense—must fetch a surcease as eternal as welcome from that awful stare from the cavernous sockets of that rider hands to her husband, does a better bit of acting than did ever Billy Coventry.

"Hello, Si! 'Twasn't fair to beat me home? We've had the loveliest run, Tartar and I—up hill and down dale! And I guess he ran off with me—but you musn't scold him for this elopement—nor me for his using himself up! I'd have stopped him if I could—but I couldn't, don't you see; and when he took the bit between his big, white teeth, I—"

"Billy, how dared you ride Tartar?"

"Are you angry, Si? I—"

"Angry?" his voice hoarse with emotion.

"When the men told me you had taken Tartar I wouldn't believe it. I ran up to our room—"

"To—our—ah!" The blackness that will not be fought off, battle she never so bravely, now takes possession of her. Its black sea seethes and surges and engulfs her, and the real Billy, escaping from the pretty tenement, allows it to fall, a limp, inert little heap in Silas Brentayne's arms.

When she comes to reoccupy her terrestrial garb, she finds herself stretched out upon her own white bed, on top of the coverlet, her clothing loosened and her face wet with that peristent drenching usually bestowed upon wanderers from consciousness.

"Si!" this in a voice attuned to the weakest of walls.

"Yes, Billy—you are better?"

"Very much—I suppose. Is Tartar—dead?"

"No."

"Will he die?"

"No."

"Would you have forgiven me if he had, Silas?"

As she turned to meet his eyes a rattle as of rustling paper suddenly greets her ears. Her message is there yet—he has not seen it! It is under her shoulder, safe hidden from those dear, pitying eyes above her own!

"I—I would forgive you anything, Billy—my darling! my darling!"

"I—I'm choking, Si—fetch me a drink from the well—a cold, fresh drink—will you?"

"Need you ask? My poor little girl!"

At his first step upon the stair Billy wrenches a bit of paper loose from its fastening, and tears it into infinitesimal fragments. And when Silas Brentayne comes back with the dripping cup he finds his wife weeping as if her heart would break.

It is strange where this rough and ready young countryman has learned the womanly art of comforting. His tender touch and loving ministrations soothe Billy into a state of blissful quietude, and, holding fast to his strong, honest hand, she falls into a refreshing, dreamless slumber.

It is twilight when she awakens. A silvery veil hangs between her sleepy eyes and objects about her. Her hand still lies in that of Silas, and as he bends toward her she starts with a cry, as from some hideous dream.

"Si," she almost shrieks, "did I dream it? Did Tartar—"

"Sh, Billy! You have had a terrible experience, and I fear the effects of the shock may last for many a day. But let us think of something else, and, while we are thinking, Time will surely blur its sharp outlines."

"I will! I will!" cries the little wife.

"I've been thinking of something lately," smiles Silas, caressing the small, shapely hand upon the coverlet, and, for all his brave smiles, looking gravely through that gate of martyrdom he feels he can no longer shun.

"I've been thinking I haven't done right by you, Billy, and I've determined to undo my mistakes as well as I'm able, and try to make up to you what you've lost."

"Lost, Silas?"

"Yes, dear. I've noticed how silent and mournful you've been of late, and I think I've guessed the reason of it all, Billy. I didn't go to Orange so much on account of the mending as I did on account of you. I settled and signed a lease, which needs only your signature, Billy, to make it a bargain, of the farm to our neighbor, Hiram Paterson, and he'll move in and take possession the first of October."

"Si!"

"But we needn't wait for that, Billy; we can pack up at once, and—"

"Silas, what do you mean?"

"That you shall go back to the old life, Billy, but with me to depend upon. And you needn't worry about me, either, for I'll enjoy it. Why, I fairly long to see my little queen of the silver moonbeams again, and, maybe, who knows? if you come dancing down in spangle and spider webs, and look at me as you used to do, the love that we've somehow seemed to have lost may come back again—there, there, darling—don't cry so!"

Thus, through the gate walked brave Brentayne; and when, in after times, he looked back at it—lo, the names had died down, and the angel had sheathed the sword!

BENEFIT OF PHYSICAL EXERCISE.

All authorities that have treated on longevity place exercise, moderate and regularly taken, as one of the main factors of a long life. That there are many exceptions does not alter the fact that physical exercise is as useful in keeping one healthy as it is to prolong life. Good walkers are seldom sick, and the same may be said of persons who daily take a certain prescribed amount of exercise. Exercise is both a preventive and a remedial measure.

In my own practice, writes a physician in the National Popular Review, "I have seen a case of peristent transpiration that followed the least bodily effort, and which annoyed and debilitated the person at night—this being a condition left after a severe illness—disappear as if by magic after a day or two of exercise on a bicycle."

Pliny relates that a Greek physician who took up his residence in Rome was wont publicly to declare that he was willing to be considered a charlatan if at any time he should ever fall ill, or if he failed to die of any other disease but old age.

Celsus, in speaking of the same physician, observes that his faith in the benefit to be derived from exercise was so great that he had in a great measure abandoned the administration of internal remedies, depending mostly on hygienic measures and exercises. As an evidence of the correctness of his views, Pliny tells us that his physician lived to be a centenarian, and then only died from an accident

L. F. SHAW.

A docile little horse had been caparisoned for Billy, and, seated in her beautiful new saddle, accompanied by Silas, mounted on his splendid steed, Tartar, she rode through the long lanes, and ambled across the meadows and fields of her little kingdom.

At first they went about joyously together, rounds of sympathetic laughter and gay badinage passing between them; but gradually, inexorably, Time, in his night, killed their sweet converse, for it died from lack of that vivacious element of kindness which was his life. It was at this time Billy Brentayne's eyes first discovered the gate through which her little worldly ambitions and youthful longing for earthly pleasures threatened to drive her.

Now, strangely enough, before Silas, also, stood a gate—a gate of silent martyrdom. To pass its yawning archway meant the sacrifice of what he felt to be little less than the sacrifice of his soul—the giving up of his inherited acres, his wholesome quietude, his mental ambitions, and his influence for good upon the denizens of his own little rural world.

Round and round their Eden they rode, the sweet fruits of their paradise growing as bitter to the taste as the ashy apples of Sodom. No healthful discord clashed the lowering clouds into harmless raindrops, but over both brooded a silence as ominous as that silence prelude to a war of the elements.

One day Silas was obliged to take the big farm wagon to Orange for some needed repairs. Billy Brentayne watched his departure from her white nest above the broad, roofed porch, and when the valley beyond the little hill had swallowed first the two big horses, then the wagon, then Silas himself, and, last of all, her own steed, which, because of his meekness, she had, in the rapturous first days of her honeymoon, named "Moses," and who, needing the blacksmith's skill, was, as a led horse, being taken to Orange, she turned with the swiftness of a darting swallow and flew down and out to the big, red barn.

"Saddle Tartar for me," she commanded. "Put my saddle on him—what?" The men dared not repeat their exclamation of dismay in the face of altogether outraged that a side saddle should have been strapped upon his lordly back, and the trailing folds of a flapping skirt whip under him in the wind. The unusual beating about of this womanly gear fretted Tartar past endurance. The folds that persistently whipped him, and would not have done that whipping, set his nerves to quivering, and, with a defiant shake of his aristocratic head, he snapped the bit between his teeth and started upon his mad effort to free himself from the incubus that would not be outtripped.

Poor little Billy! At first she laughed, when the swift pace changed to a canter, and the canter to a gallop; but when the gallop ended in a run—when trees dashed by and fences took upon themselves the forms of two ghostly white lines—when the warm air grew cold with her fearful onward rushing through it, the runaway's cheeks paled, her lips grew white, her eyes opened wide with fear, and her heart beat almost to suffocation.

Death, grim death, stared her in the face. She saw herself lying, a mutilated mass, by the roadside; saw Silas stoop to look upon her set, white face; saw the horror in his eyes, his dark eyes, so full of tender pride and love!

But there is a new expression in his face as he finds her; he has read that last message—the one she pinned to the coverlet—hours, days, ages ago! How cold his eyes are—and how stern! Even her mangled body does not soften their fierce light—there are no tears there, none!

On and on and on! Is there really a little white nest from which she has fled, a peaceful home in the heart of a quiet green valley? On and on—is this a nightmare from which she must soon awaken?

Ah, no! It is real, this terrible flight—her aching hands, clutching convulsively at the pommels, assure her of that. Has she sinned, then, to the hideous need of such awful punishment as this? Has vanity brought her to this awful extremity, and bade Death hold the mirror of her life before the quickened eyes of her spirit?

To have changed for light and love and laughter—who urges his pale steed ever in advance of her own!

All idea of locality has long ago been lost, North, South, East, West—all points lead to death! How long, how long this fearful flight has lasted!

Tartar's sweat darkened alids are flecked with foam; from his delicate veins, proving his Arabian ancestry, the blood oozes in vivid drops through the hot hide. On he goes—on and on!

Suddenly, in the midst of her agony, Billy feels Tartar's pace slacken. It is as if she were drowning and had touched a saving support.

A great wave of hope sends new strength to endure surging into her veins. She closes her staring eyes, and tastes the bliss of a condemned soul pardoned at the eleventh hour. Ah, God is good! He has meant to show her her folly—to teach her a lesson that—but what is this?

Tartar shows his forced gait to one as easy as the rocking of a cradle—stumbles, halts—then falls—a quivering, panting, bleeding mass of flesh!

Billy falls too—but luckily free of the descending bulk, and lies there upon the soft grass, so still, so voiceless, so dumbly grateful for the life left to her; but suddenly, like an electric volt that sears her very soul, the thought that her message will stand the angel in the gate of her Eden sets her bolt upright.

With a gasp Billy gets upon her feet. Where is she? A great cry escapes her. There, not a hundred yards away, is home—bleased, beautiful home!

She staggers toward the farm, her bruised and stiffened limbs requiring the sharpest commands of her eager soul to bear her onward. To get there before Silas, to destroy her written words, to—

"Billy! Billy!"

It was Silas rushing toward her from the barn. A blackness that does not come from the golden air about her threatens to shut her out from the sunny world and render her as unconscious as poor dove out Tartar prone upon the grasses. With a stupendous effort Billy Brentayne rallies her reeling senses, and, reaching out two throbbing white

Her Little Valise.
She had five or six trunks of remarkable size
And a tiny valise.
The trunks she appeared very highly to prize,
But not the valise.
The custom house officer sized up the pile,
And thought that the woman must travel in style,
But he didn't believe it was really worth while
To touch the valise.

He opened the trunks to see what was there,
But "passed" the valise.
'Twas such a diminutive, dainty affair—
Was the little valise.
But she was a dancer, a star on the stage,
And the trunks held her "notices"—page after page;
But the costumes she wore that had made her the rage
Were in the valise.

Cincinnati vs. Philadelphia.

The fourth game between these clubs was played on 27, at Cincinnati, the home team then scoring their first victory of the season. Pott's pitching proved very effective, he holding the Philadelphians down to five safe hits and three runs. Weying was battered hard by the home team in the third and seventh innings, when they bunched their hits

[illegible]

The closely contested game was played June 30, but timely hitting helped the Baltimoreans to victory, and pushed the Cleveland down to seventh place in the league. The home team started well but poor fielding, and timid base running in the latter part of the contest, were responsible for defeat. Brodie led in batting, his three safe hits, including a home run and a double batter. The pitcher, Fred Lister, pitched a good game, allowing only one hit, and a double batter by O'Connor. Young and Hicks kept the hits well distributed throughout the contest. Childs accepted eight chances at second base, three of which started new double plays.

Cincinnati vs. Washington.

The fourth game was played June 28, at Cincinnati, O., the home team then evening up the victories in the series. Chamberlain held the visitors

Chicago vs. Cleveland.

The Clevelanders scored their seventh victory of the series from the Chicagoans July 1, at Chicago, Ill., when these teams played off a postponed game of May 27, last, it then being prevented by rain. The Chicagoans mated Clarkson out of the box, in the second inning, when they scored three runs, and took a comfortable lead. Cuppy replaced Clarkson, and managed to keep the hits made down to a minimum. In the eighth inning, when the Chicagoans scored six runs, Griffith was hit hard throughout the game. Many long hits were made, Zimmer getting a home run, while Lange, Dahlen, Burkett, Cuppy and Griffith were the only ones to get on base. Simon, twice, and Ryan and O'Connor double batters.

Cincinnati vs. Brooklyn.

The Cincinnati scored their second victory of the series when they defeated the Brooklyn, 4 to 1, in a contest that had a close and exciting finish. The Brooklyn played a close and exciting game, and a timely rally at the bat in the eighth inning scored three runs and came within two runs of tying the score. Chamberlain was hit hard, but managed to keep the ball well scattered, except in the first and eighth innings, when the visitors earned four of their seven runs. Daily was freely batted throughout, especially by Holliday and Canavan. The latter's three hits included a home run and a double bagger. Latham's all around work was one of the features. He made a fine catch of a very wide throw ball, on which he put out one of the Brooklyn players, who was caught between the bases.

Louisville vs. Baltimore.

The Louisville scored their first victory of the series from the Baltimore, July 1, at Louisville, Ky. The latter were then shut out without a run for the first time this season. Hemming was in excellent trim, and held the visitors down to six safe hits, which he kept well apart. For five innings the Louisville batted Hawke's pitching quite freely and earned three of the six runs they scored. After that Hawke's pitching was prevented, and the home team from scoring again. The long safe hits were double baggers by Richardson, twice, Grim and Weaver. The base running of Brown and Pfeiffer was a feature.

St. Louis vs. Washington.

After losing three games to Pittsburgh and three to Cincinnati, respectively, the Washingtons visited St. Louis, Mo., on July 1, and there defeated the St. Louis Browns in what proved a pitcher's contest. The Washingtons made only three safe hits, including a triple bagger by Ward, off Hertenstein. He gave five men their base on balls, however, which aided the Washingtons in scoring four runs in the first, and gave them a lead that they maintained throughout. Esper, although batted safely five times, including a home run by Frank and a triple bagger by Shugart, was very effective at critical stages.

Chicago vs. New York.

The fourth game of the series was played June 28, at Chicago, Ill., the New Yorks then winning for the third time. Ward laid off on account of illness, and Fuller filled the vacancy at second base, while Murphy reappeared at short stop. An excusable error by Wilmet, and three scratch singles in the fifth inning helped the New Yorks to their first three runs. Another run was scored in the sixth, when Van Halten bunted the ball and reached first in safety, scoring on a hard hit by Farrell. The Chicagoans were unable to bat Rosie until the seventh inning, when three successive singles and a base on balls brought in two runs. Turner and Murphy triple batted in the eighth inning, and Farrell followed with a fly, which Terry, in attempting to catch, hurt himself, so he was obliged to retire, and Hutchinson finished the game. The home team bunched three more singles off Rosie in the ninth, and, with the aid of a base on balls, scored three runs, and made an exciting finish, a lucky catch by Doyle of a liner saving the game.

Chicago vs. Philadelphia.

The Philadelphia defeated the Chicago July 2, at Chicago, Ill., in what proved to be a great slugfest. Both Stratton and Casey were freely batted, the former being knocked out of the pitcher's position in the seventh inning, when he was replaced by McGuffey. Casey remained throughout the game. Turner hurt his leg in the fourth inning and retired in favor of Grady, who went to first base and belatedly to left field. Ryan, Anson and Cross led in batting. The former's three hits included a home run. The other long hits were triple baggers by Sullivan and Wilmet, while double baggers were made by Cross, twice, Turner, Thompson, Wilmet, Anson and Stratton each once. Sullivan's short stopping was excellent, he accepting nine chances in that position.

Philadelphia vs. Cincinnati.

The Cincinnati scored their second victory of the series when they defeated the Philadelphia, 4 to 1, in a contest that had a close and exciting finish. The Philadelphia played a close and exciting game, and a timely rally at the bat in the eighth inning scored three runs and came within two runs of tying the score. Chamberlain was hit hard, but managed to keep the ball well scattered, except in the first and eighth innings, when the visitors earned four of their seven runs. Daily was freely batted throughout, especially by Holliday and Canavan. The latter's three hits included a home run and a double bagger. Latham's all around work was one of the features. He made a fine catch of a very wide throw ball, on which he put out one of the Brooklyn players, who was caught between the bases.

Cleveland vs. New York.

The New Yorks visited Cleveland, O., July 2, for the first time this season and defeated the Cleveland in what proved the most exciting contest seen there this year. The New Yorks won by their superior all around work, but the home team, sore over their many defeats, tried hard to bulldoze Empire Valley because it was a new man. The rough tactics used by the Cleveland Club's players should be discouraged by the officials of the major league. President Young, anticipating trouble, had two umpires on hand to officiate. Both men did their work in an impartial manner, but as Hartley was a new man, Captain Tebeau and the rougher element of his players began to abuse him early in the game. Tebeau became so obnoxious that he was finally ordered out of the game in the sixth inning and, as a result, he has protested the contest. The better element among the spectators did not sanction the conduct of the home team. The game was a lively one from start to finish, and the result was in doubt until the eighth inning, when the New Yorks took a lead by scoring two runs, and maintained it. Griffith started in to pitch, but was so wild in giving bases on balls that he was retired in the third inning, after three runs had been scored, in favor of Clarkson. Five double plays were made in the course of the game, while the all around work of Farrell, Doyle and Van Halten was excellent. Rosie was wild at the start, but settled down and had the Cleveland at his mercy after the first inning.

Pittsburg vs. Boston.

The Boston scored their second victory of the season from the Pittsburg July 2, at Pittsburg, Pa., by their timely batting and faultless fielding. The Boston bunched their hits in the third and ninth innings and earned five of the seven runs scored by them. Nichols pitched very effectively. In two innings only—the fourth and fifth—could the home team do anything with his pitching. Then they made four of their five hits. The long hits were triple baggers by Long and Donovan and a double by Lowe. Shiebeck, who took Lyons' place at short base, accepted all seven chances. Glasscock, Bauer, Lowe, Long and Nash also felled well.

The Fourth at Coney Island.

The regular opening day of the Brighton Beach Jockey Association is the Fourth of July, and judging from the records of the past, there will be thousands enter the gates of a track that is one of the most popular with the racegoers in this vicinity. Secretary Sass announces that in order to allow the owners and riders of timber topers an opportunity to participate in the steeplechases at both Brighton and the track of the Coney Island Jockey Club at Sheepshead Bay, the steeplechase on the programme at the Brighton track will be the third event on the programme, and, as that at Sheepshead is the seventh on the card, this will give abundant time. The stewards at Brighton for Independence Day will be Col. S. D. Bruce, H. D. McIntyre and Hon. John W. Worsfold. The entries for the principal event, the mile handicap, are as follows:

Clifford, 122; speculation, 100; Lamplighter, 118; Kilder, 100; Comanche, 111; Major General, 100; Daily America, 112; Mr. Magpie, 100; Ferrier, 106; Lord Essex, 99; St. Michael, 103; Pactum, 93; Ducat, 105; Lou Rhet, 92; Libertine, 104; Doublet, 91; Trotter, 103; Tom Tough, 90; Stowaway, 103; Joliet, 99; Chant, 102; Lifeboat, 90; Dorian, 102; Lizzie McBurn, 90; Bel Demonic, 102; Song and Dance, 90; Sir Knight, 102; Harry Alonzo, 90; Jack Rouse, 102; Roller, 102; Wilmar, 90; Lizzie, 101; Vesposian, 90; Vestibule, 101; Mosholo, 90; Biscuit, 101; Charter, 90; Tom Finn, 90; St. Max, 100; Clarus, 85; Captain T., 100.

"Old Bones" Put to Death.

Raceland, the aged race horse, once winner of the Suburban Handicap, and which had placed many other stakes of value to his credit, was destroyed at the stables of his owner, M. F. Dwyer, at Sheepshead Bay, on June 28. The famous old son of Imp. Bullet-Camel had suffered for some days from paralysis of the hind legs and spinal trouble, and when Veterinary Dr. Shepherd, who had been treating him, found that his case was hopeless, he advised that he be shot, in order that the horse might be relieved of the intense pain from which he was suffering. His owner very reluctantly ordered the foreman of the stables, John Dennis, to kill him, which he did, three balls being fired from a revolver into his brain before death ensued. The animal was a great favorite with his owner and was highly popular among the stable boys, and to turfmen was familiarly known by the sobriquet of "Old Bones." He was foaled at the establishment of the late August Belmont, nine years ago, and was the property of that

"At last! I didn't think he ever would."
 "Oh, yes! He's been at work on it only a year."
 "Dear me! Isn't that a long time?"
 "We didn't think so. We're engaged now."

AQUATIC.

YALE vs. HARVARD.

The Wearers of the Blue Easily Win an Uninteresting Race.

The annual contest between the "Varsity" crews of Yale and Harvard Colleges attracted the customary great crowds of undergraduates of those and other institutions, together with their hundreds of relatives and friends, to the quiet city of New London, Ct., on Thursday, June 29, when the event that arouses such a flutter in the college world was decided. The result of the match proved most disappointing, however, as it was simply a procession from start to finish, with Harvard's representatives never in it, and being beaten at the finish by about seventeen lengths, although rowing their hardest, while the winners rowed leisurely during the latter part of the contest. The race took place under very favorable conditions of wind and water, and the condition of both crews seemed perfect, so that the losers could not attribute their ignominious defeat to anything save the superior ability of their opponents. A race so lacking in incident and so uninteresting does not merit or warrant description, therefore we confine ourselves to chronicling the result, with the personal statistics of the rival crews, the time and officials, for record purposes. The following table gives the makeup of the crews, etc.:

YALE WINS THE TRIANGULAR.

The Boys in Blue Beat the Freshmen from Columbia and Fair Harvard.

The triangular boat race in which the Freshmen crews of Yale, Columbia and Harvard Colleges engaged was to have been decided over the two mile straightaway course on the Thames River, near New London, Ct., on Wednesday afternoon, June 27, but in consequence of the unfavorable state of the water it was necessarily postponed till the following morning, when it was rowed in water that was good enough, the fresh breeze that still prevailed coming from another direction and not roughening the surface of the stream. One effect that the postponement exercised was in largely augmenting the number of people present, the incoming trains the preceding night and on the morning of the struggle bringing large crowds. Comparatively little interest had been manifested in the event, but the result proved it was infinitely more worthy of being time and spending money to witness than was the main event, the contest between the "Varsity" crews, in which the interest of the people was centered. As between the representatives of Yale and Columbia it was well worth while seeing, for although the lads from the Elm City gained the leading position at the signal, and maintained it throughout, and although the rowing of the youngsters was far from perfect, the manner in which they held their own, and stuck to the leaders kept up the interest of the spectators, for it was evident that in case there should happen to be any weak spot in the Yaleans the New Yorkers would surely assume the post of honor. As for the lads in the Harvard boat, their performance was altogether a disappointment, they falling steadily to the rear and soon ceasing to be a factor in the race. There was no wavering among the boys in blue, however, and, keeping their place by continuous and well sustained effort, they eventually reached the goal of their ambition some three lengths in advance of the struggling Columbians. The appended table gives the statistics and formation of the respective crews.

THE SAIL ARKA of the cutter Valkyrie has been increased by 1,200 ft., and five and a half tons of lead have been added to her keel. It is expected that these alterations will considerably increase her speed. The sail arka of the Valkyrie remains the same as during her races for the America Cup, and according to the views of experts the boat will be better handled than during her former races. Hank Hall will be in command, and old Morris, of Largs, Scotland, the most experienced pilot in those waters, will act in that capacity on board of her.

R. ARMSTRONG, '95, who occupied the bow thwart in the victorious Yale boat in the race with Harvard last week, was on June 28 unanimously elected captain of the "Varsity" crew for next year. He was the bowman in last year's Freshman crew, and is regarded as the strongest all round man at Yale.

The Yacht Vigilant Abroad.

A cablegram from Glasgow, Scotland, dated June 29, says that the sloop Vigilant was to be docked on the following day for the purpose of having her bottom cleaned and being otherwise put in order. It had been definitely decided that the American flyer would not be entered in the regatta which were to be sailed on July 3, 4 and 5, on the Clyde, and it is probable that she will remain docked until July 7, when she will take part in the Royal Clyde Regatta, for the Queen's Cup, although not yet entered for that event. Other regattas and races in which she is expected to take part are as follows: Royal Northern, 11, 12; Royal Ulster, Yacht Club, Belfast, 16, 17; Royal St. George's Yacht Club, Kingston, 20, 21; Royal Cork, July 23; Royal Munster, 24; Penzance, 27; the Royal Cornwall, 28; a match with the Britannia, 31; Royal London Yacht Club, Cowes, Aug. 6; Royal Yacht Squadron, Cowes, 8, 9, 10; Royal Yacht Club, Southampton, 11; Royal Victoria Yacht Club, Exeter, 14, 15, 17; Royal Albert Yacht Club, Portsmouth, 20, 21; Royal Dorset Yacht Club, Weymouth, 24, 25; Royal Yacht Club, Torquay, 27, 28; Royal Yacht Club, Dartmouth, 31, and the Royal Yacht Club, Plymouth, Sept. 3.

Sail Herreshoff, of the Herreshoff Company, builders, Bristol, R. I., arrived at Plymouth, N. H., June 29, on the steamer Etruria, and proceeded to Liverpool, from which place he was to go direct to the Clyde for the purpose of looking over the boat. He declined to be interviewed, but remarked that the quick passage of the Vigilant did not at all surprise him, being just what he had anticipated, knowing as well as he did the seagoing qualities of the craft and her sailing powers.

PROF. ROACH.

PROFESSOR ROACH AND WIFE, the champion players and dancers of this country, and the leading teachers of all the latest stage and ballroom dances. If you would become a first class musical artist, an artistic and graceful dancer for the stage or ballroom, take lessons of PROFESSOR ROACH AND WIFE, the leading teachers of Chicago, and the champions of this country of acrobatic or genteel song and dance, trick playing on the violin in seven different ways. Perform on twenty two different instruments, and are the only teachers in Chicago that can perform to teach back and front somersaults, back and front hand springs, neck springs, head springs, shoulder springs, dip springs and wheelings. All step and fancy dances, high kicking, jumping and bending taught. Professor Roach and wife are the only teachers in Chicago who can properly fit ladies or gents for the stage in song, dance, or song and dance, playing the banjo, guitar, mandolin or violin, and dancing at the same time. We will convince the public of our ability by challenging any two teachers in this country for over $1,000 that can equal us in our line of business. PROF. ROACH offers any teacher in Chicago $500 who can do one half of what he does in dancing, playing, and acrobatic work; no bluff. PROFESSOR ROACH AND WIFE, 176 West Madison Street, Chicago. Open day and evening. Residence, 119 Hamilton Street, Chicago.

IMPORTANT TO MEDICINE MEN AND LECTURERS.

Something new is needed to make money, ordinary medicine won't pay. We import the best medicines, the fastest selling medicines on record. You can take a rheumatic or paralytic cripple on a stage in view of an audience and make him walk off without his crutches in less than one hour. Anyone can do this with the Veno Remedies. The greatest success ever made in England was secured by these medicines in this way. It creates wonderful excitement and makes rapid sales. In towns where other companies had failed our agents have gone in and by curing cripples secured business confidence and done enormous business. We will sell these medicines at low prices to any reliable agent or lecturer who will take out a company and advertise the drug trade for us. Special terms to good men, and an ample supply of beautiful printing with full instructions how to cure the cripples. Don't waste time, take a hold of these medicines at once while they are fresh. Don't sleep five years, then write to us. Write now for prices and particulars. Address: THE VENO DRUG CO., 100 Second Ave., Pittsburgh, Pa. With an X at the end, spell S;
And an E and a Y and an F spell I,
Pray what is a speller to do?
Then if also an S and an I and a G
And an H E D spell side,
There is nothing much left for a speller to do
But to go and commit slanders.

DUELS IN THE RUSSIAN ARMY.

A law concerning duelling among officers of the Russian army has just received the sanction of the czar, and it is promulgated by the Minister of War. As published in The St. Petersburg Zeitung, it reads as follows:

1. The commander of a regiment is required to refer for investigation to a court of honor, composed of officers, all affairs in which the honor of an officer has been the object of insults or affronts, uttered either by a brother officer or by a person not connected with the army.

2. If, after inquiring into the matter, the court of honor, duly observing Section 149 of the disciplinary code, is of the opinion that an attempt at reconciliation is consistent with the dignity of the body of officers of the imperial army, such an attempt shall be made. If, however, the court is satisfied that reconciliation is not consistent with the honor of an officer, the court of honor should give it as its opinion that the officers involved in the matter should settle their differences by a duel.

3. In case the officer involved in the decision of the court of honor, take steps to arrange for a duel, the court shall make efforts to induce the seconds to prescribe such conditions for the combat as will seem to fit the nature of the difficulty as nearly as possible.

4. If the duel has not taken place a fortnight after the court of honor has rendered its decision, the commander of the regiment is required to report to his superior the name of the officer refusing to fight, at the same time recommending his dismissal, provided the said officer has not resigned on his own account.

5. For departments of the army where there are no bodies corresponding to the court of honor, the duties of this court devolve upon the commanding officer of the department, provided no officers of a higher rank beyond his jurisdiction are involved in the matter.

It is further ordered that matters pertaining to affairs of honor, which in accordance with Section 553 of the military code a military court must take cognizance of, shall be treated as follows:

"An amendment to Section 553 of the Military Code. The result of an inquiry into the circumstances surrounding a duel between officers, of which a military court is by law required to take cognizance, shall be submitted to the commander of the regiment, who in turn transmits the papers, as well as the decision of the court of honor, to the Minister of War. In case the latter is of the opinion that further judicial steps should not be taken, he will submit a report to his Majesty the Emperor."

In a further order of the day the Minister of War extends the jurisdiction of courts of honor to cases where officers, while defending their honor or making reparation for offenses against others, display lack of a true sense of honor, or where they evidently do not appreciate their rank and station in life, and also where an officer is satisfied by making merely an outward showing of a desire to vindicate his honor without having a true regard for the dignity of the officers of the imperial army.

HE WAS "BAD SKEERED."

And With Good Reason, for He Had Just Got Married for the First Time.

"I was over in Indiana last week," remarked the drummer, "and on a train going toward Indianapolis I saw a young man in a brand new suit of clothes and a blue necktie. He was as green as a gourd, and the young woman with him wasn't much riper. About three o'clock in the afternoon he came into the smoker of the Pullman and sat down nervously. I was in there talking to a man from Vincennes. After a few minutes he gave a slight cough and pulled down his collar as if it choked him.

"Has either of you gentlemen ever been married?" he queried.

"I haven't," said I.

"I have," said the Vincennes man, "and my third wife is now living."

"Good!" exclaimed the young fellow, "you don't say?"

"Yes, I do say."

"And you lived through it?" questioned the youth.

"Certainly. Why not?" said the Vincennes man, somewhat indignantly.

"Cause I got married this morning at nine o'clock and ever since I've been sort of chokin' in the throat and feelin' queer, and I begin to be afraid I won't go on to live through it. It's my first attempt and I ain't used to it yet. Seein' you, though, has braced me up kinder and I begin to have hopes. I'll go back now to Mary, and if you see me lookin' walshy and likely to caven 'tween here and Indianapolis, won't you nudge me up again? I'm bad skeered, mister, but goodby, and he went back into the car and the Vincennes man kept his eye on him the rest of the way."—Detroit Free Press.

HER REVENGE.

She Could Not Go to the Seashore, but Could Pretend She Went.

"Got a boat?" she brusquely demanded of a Detroit photographer, as she walked in the other day.

"Yes'm."

"And a fish pole?"

"Yes'm."

"And a painted ocean for a background?"

"Yes'm."

"Look like Cape May?"

"It does."

"Can you get a good looking young man to sit on the boat with me?"

"I can."

"Then I want six photos."

"Yes'm. Do you go down to the seashore this Summer?"

"Now! Dad's busted in business, and we've got to take cheap board on a farm. I want the photos just the same, you know. Want 'em to send to a girl friend who is sick and can't get anywhere this Summer. She'll think I'm down there all right."

"Sort of an illusion, eh?"

"Sort of revenge, rather. We were down there last season, and she stole my Summer young man away. I want to make her believe I've got him back. Hurry up with the fellow, and tell him he can sit with one around me and his mustache touching my ear!"—Detroit Free Press.

O'RAFFERTY'S LITTLE JOKE.

"What have you to say to this charge of assaulting Michael Rafferty?" asked the Judge.

"O' icked 'im," replied Mr. Doan, looking the Court in the eye. "An' wid no disrespect to anybody to whom respect is due, it's hopin' O' am that O' done it good."

"Was there any provocation?"

"They wor that same."

"What was it?"

"O' hov a goat, Yer 'Anner; a foine animal, too. Does yer goat give milk?" says Rafferty to me. "It does," says O'. "Tain't," says he, "it's butter milk. It's as swate an' foine as any yer ever saw," says O'. "Certainly; but it's butter milk," says he, an' then we name together. Though O' mus' say, Yer 'Anner, that with O' came to repate it over a few times an' consider the nature of the goat, O' m' compelled to say O' wer a bit haishy. Bedad, if the Court'll give me lave, O'll 'pologize to Rafferty, so O' will.—Exchange.
